Facts:*"Speculaas" or "speculoos", are they the same thing? The answer is... no!

"Speculaas" and "speculoos" are two different biscuits. The difference is in the flavourings that are used. Speculaas spices are used in "speculaas" (a mixture of cinnamon, cloves, ginger powder, nutmeg, cardamom and white pepper). Other spices are sometimes added as well, a bit depending on who is preparing the mix.

"Speculoos" means that the biscuit is made without spices. Usually candy syrup or burnt sugar is used for the colour and often cinnamon for the taste and smell, but no other spices.

In the Netherlands, "speculaas" is usually eaten, in Belgium "speculoos". Spices used to be cheaper in the past in the Netherlands, thanks to their colonies in the Far East. Therefore, in Belgium, the cheaper variant without the speculaas spices is usually made.

In French, only the word "spéculoos" exists for both biscuits. There is no distinction between 'speculaas' and 'speculoos'.

Presently both are prepared and consumed as well in Belgium as in the Netherlands

Note:

However, Philanews No. 4 / 2020 (page 11) ( Dutch language version) only mentions "speculaas" and not "speculoos". The explanation is intended for "speculaas".

As already mentioned, 'spéculoos' is only mentioned for both products in French.

In the French-language 'Philanews', however, the explanation is only for the 'speculaas' with added spices - there referred to as 'spéculoos'.

In English, however, there is no translation for both cookies just "spiced biscuit", "brown spiced biscuit", "gingerbread", "ginger cookies" or the like.

This is in fact a filled cake with almond paste, nothing to do with the well-known speculaas or speculoos.

Speculaas' from Hasselt (Hasselt is the capital of province Limburg)

Speculoos would then again be a typical Belgian term. In Hasselt, however, they call it 'Hasselt speculaas'. Like ours, this speculaas is known for being a bit thicker, more tender and less spicy.
